Teen extends community outreach to cancer foundation

DENISEN HARTLOVE
Clayton Pioneer

When Haley Morucci's homework is done and the family's two horses are fed, instead of repeating the rallying cry of teens everywhere – "Mom, I'm boooooored!" – Haley can likely be found hard at work making the world a better place.

Whether she's leading her school yearbook class on a "clean the creek" day, helping tame a young horse rescued from the slaughterhouse, donating her own hair to the Locks of Love organization or raising funds for the Lazarex Cancer Foundation, Morucci is setting an inspiring example.

"Sometimes you think you can't help because a problem is so big. But then you see these young girls trying to make a difference and you realize that the more people that help, the more you can make a difference," says family friend Yvette Ibsen.

Kim Morucci says her daughter comes across as being shy. "She's not shy – she's just quiet," she notes. "When she finds something she's passionate about, she just goes with it."

Not too long ago, Haley's yearbook class at Diablo View Middle School was urged by their teacher to become more active in the community. After hearing about a bicycle accident caused when a rider hit an exposed pipe along a local trail, Haley suggested a "clean the creek" campaign.

Leading a dozen or so of her classmates, Haley could be found roving the creek from Safeway to the Clayton library helping prevent similar accidents in the future.

Haley's latest cause hits a little closer to home for the Morucci family. Dan Henry, a 44-year-old undergoing intensive chemotherapy for his third bout with cancer, is at the heart of Haley's latest project.

When the Morucci family learned of Henry's diagnosis of lung cancer, they sprang into action –gathering information about the latest treatments and technologies. One of those resources was the Lazarex Cancer Foundation. The group helps late-stage cancer patients who may have exhausted other treatment options connect with and pay for treatments that are still in clinical trial stages and may not be covered by health insurance.

Haley remembers overhearing her parents talk about "Uncle Dan."

"They had been talking for a few days about the options," she said. "So I went online and checked out (the Lazarex) Website. I thought it was really cool, and I wanted to do something that would help them."

Like many other teens, Haley has a collection of colorful rubber bracelets like those popularized by Lance Armstrong's LiveStrong campaign. "I looked online for a Website that would make those. I found the Website and I designed the rubber bracelet," she described.

The bright orange bracelets bear the message "Hope, Dignity and Life – Lazarex Cancer Foundation." With friend Lauren Ibsen, Haley began selling the bracelets for $2. Her campaign continues to grow and she has raised more than $800.

"This is absolutely the most important donation we have ever received as it represents not only love and kindness, but the realization from someone so small that life matters and she can make a difference in the world," Lazarex founder and president Dana Dornsife wrote in an email. Haley is frank about her expectations. "I don't really have a goal," she said. "I just want to keep trying to get the word out."

Obtain your bracelet by emailing the Morucci family at polkadot65@gmail.com, or at Walnut Creek Vacuum and Electric Motor Service in Walnut Creek, Fit-2-the-Core Training Systems in Concord and Maximum Definition in Walnut Creek.
